

Our vision of the post office

Our public post office is important. It helps people communicate. It allows communities to thrive and businesses to grow. Hence, it plays a social, cultural and economic role in society, for the good of society as a whole.

CUPW wants a post office that:

- Remains a publicly-owned enterprise, responsible to Parliament and the public;
- Adheres to its public service mandate;
- Retains exclusive privilege over the delivery of standard letter mail;
- Provides door-to-door delivery in urban areas;
- Provides rural delivery;
- Maintains post offices in rural and urban communities;
- Delivers admail;
- Maximizes environmentally-friendly practices;
- Offers industry leading parcel and courier services to small business, large corporations and the public, regardless of location;
- Develops new products and services;
- Keeps jobs in communities;
- Maximizes the amount of work done “in-house”, and minimizes the “contracting-out” of work;
- Provides its employees with safe, unionized, decently-compensated jobs, and good working conditions;
- Invests its profits and dividend payments in services, infrastructure, health and safety measures, and its employees.
